Thursday, February 6. 1707.

Amsterdam, Feb. 8.

KING Augustus's Minister at the Hague, has presented a Memorial to the States, in which he desires them to return a positive Answer to the Offer of the King his Master to put his Troops into their Service; and the 5th Inst. he had a Conference with the States Deputies on that Subject. The Minister of Sweden countenances his Proceedings in this Affair, shews a great Disposition to forward it, and having been founded whether the King his Master would not take it ill if the Saxons should be entertain'd in the Service of the Allies, has declar'd that on the contrary he would be extremely pleas'd with it. After all, Men of the clearest Sense are not without Jealousy that there is some Mystery in this Offer of the Saxons to the Allies; they are apprehensive it may be made by Concert with a Design to amuse them; for, say they, it seems incomprehensible that King Augustus should give himself the Trouble of raising Recruits to fill up those Troops, before he knows whether they will be accepted or not. Order has been sent to M. Linflo, who is at Berlin, to solicit that Court that the 12000 Prussians, which serv'd last Year in the Netherlands, may march to the upper Rhine. The States have written to the Provinces whose Turn it is to nominate the Field Deputies for this Year, to make that Nomination in Time. They have at length concluded on the Deputies to reside on their Part at Brussels; and M. van Collen and Renswoode are the Persons; those Gentlemen are willing to take upon them this Employment, but because of the unavoidably great Expence of it, desire a better Salary than the common Allowance, and 'tis thought will obtain it.

Amsterdam, Feb. 11. The Czar of Muscovy's Ambassador at the Hague, has newly receiv'd Letters from his Master, in which he declares he is resolv'd to continue the War with Sweden, even with the Hazard of his Crown. The Court of Prussia, in Answer to the Instances made on the Part of the States, that the 12000 Prussians may serve the ensuing Campaign on the Upper Rhine, have signified, that at this Juncture while there are so great Divisions in Poland, they cannot yield to the removing of those Troops to such a Distance. The States having appointed Count Rechteren to go to Vienna and several other Places in the Empire, his Instructions (which the present Circumstances of Affairs in Germany require should be very ample,) are drawing up, and he is preparing to be gone very suddenly. Letters from Frankfort have put us into no little Apprehension for Landau; assuring us that the Enemy have actually embark'd their Artillery at Strasbourg. All Men in this Country are heartily inclin'd to think well of the King of Sweden's Intentions; but admitting there be no secret Understanding between him and France, as the Enemy would (falsely we believe) insinuate there is, yet 'tis much fear'd his bare staying in Saxony will prevent the drawing together of such a Number of the Troops of the Empire, as may be requisite to oppose the Execution of the French Designs on the upper Rhine.
